3. MHRS Examination Method

Through the MHRS examination method, the source states that blood circulation in the nervous system/nerve tissue for the general public and for incurable diseases can be observed from head to toe within one minute through an Electro Point Detector machine, along with purification. It states that lifestyle and daily-routine information is obtained quickly and that the approach is based on scientific reasoning.

The source states that MHRS is registered with the Government of India in medicine, health, education, science, patents and research, and describes it as providing a high-quality, harmless solution intended for the general public and for incurable diseases, including information at an international level and support for long-term health/longevity.

4. Consultation — ₹1,000

The source describes a facility made through modern research MHRS and a patented examination method. It states that the method creates a graph of the human body's blood circulation and purification and provides consultation and guidance for identifying, preventing and solving diseases that may occur from birth to the present and future.

It further states that services are provided by the MHRS originator, described as an international gold medalist, and that knowledge-based health information has been developed through 22 years of dedication. Reports from other treatment methods, modern research centers, pathology and diagnostic investigations are also described as being reviewed and discussed.

5. MHRS Graph — ₹2,500

The source describes this as an option in which the MHRS graph examination method is used to assess blood circulation and purification. Based on the resulting report and instructions, consultation and guidance are provided according to the current condition. The process is described as being based on blood purification and circulation in the nervous system and refers to a 25 percent irregularity and impure blood as a basis for preparing the graph, with the stated purpose of identifying, preventing and solving various diseases that may occur in the future.

6. MHRS Graph — ₹5,500

The source describes this graph as a mysterious concept based on knowledge concerning human-body structure and the 22 years of medical experience of MHRS originator Gyani Das Manikpuri. It describes the human body as standing like an inverted tree and as being continuously naturally controlled or regulated.

It states that the human body consists of countless small cells, tissues and organs that together form the human structure, and refers to the importance of the five elements (Panch Tatva). It states that excess or deficiency of any element can lead to disease and that timely examination, consultation and testing are important.

The source further describes an Electro Point Detector assessment of 50 percent irregular blood circulation in the nervous system and states that the graph is necessary on that basis. It makes claims concerning prevention of physical damage and elimination of incurable diseases and conditions such as heart attack.

7. MHRS Graph — ₹11,000

The source describes a modern-research graph in which the examination process is completed within 10 minutes without asking the patient about symptoms or age. It discusses people suffering from incurable or hereditary diseases and describes the situation of patients who have exhausted other medical options.

The graph is described as discussing lifestyle and daily routine from birth to the present and future. The source states that the information should be matched with reports from major international-level methods such as MRI, CT scan, X-ray, Sonography and Pathology, and that the process should proceed only after the report is established as reliable.

The source concludes that the examination is based on 50 percent blood circulation and states that this can increase trust and help save human life.
